Why an 'Urban Village'?

The idea of an Urban Village for the site grew out of government policies to encourage patterns of building which are less reliant on car travel with its attendant pollution and congestion.

An Urban Village aims to bring some of the diversity of rural communities to the town by grouping housing more closely with services, shops and jobs, and offering a mix of house types and flats. A wide range of facilities are already present in the local area and others may be set up as a result of the new development.

The Gallions Reach scheme will therefore build on the framework already in place to help create a more rounded community at Thamesmead.

Planning the Site

As with all outline planning applications, the current proposals set out the main guidelines for future development across the site, including the main road access and an indication of how building work will progress across the site. The detailed design of buildings, roads, open spaces etc. will follow, based on the principles in the agreed Master Plan as shown here.

The Master Plan proposes major new public open spaces as follows:-

- a new riverside walk connecting Woolwich waterside to Thamesmead Central
- a canalside park, extending Gallions Lake and creating extensive new wildlife habitats
- an area for future sports and recreation facilities at Tripcock Park
- a central landmark feature with extensive river views from Gallions Hill

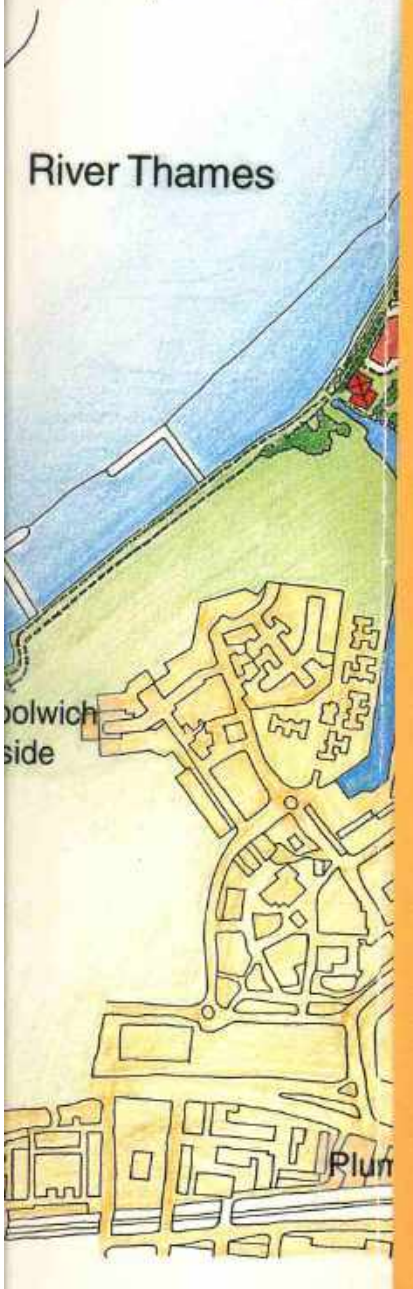

A new local centre is also planned at Battery Road, where commercial development interest is strongest. Its precise form will be determined at the detailed stage, but could include a petrol filling station, local shopping, a restaurant/takeaway and a budget price hotel.

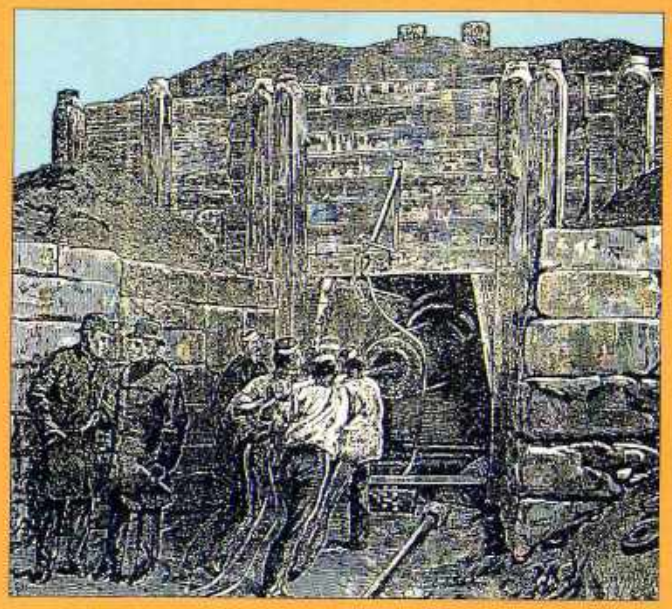

A site is also being reserved for a new riverside pub/ restaurant at Broadwater Dock.

Typical street scene

An outline planning application for a major new development at Thamesmead has been submitted to Greenwich Borough Council by Thamesmead Town, together with a group of the foremost national housebuilders.

The proposals are designed to bring the existing development at Heronsgate together with a new community emerging at the Gallions Reach Riverfront. It will support an increasing range of local shopping, employment and leisure facilities.

This leaflet briefly describes the scheme, sets out where you can view the proposal and explains how you can make your views known.

Please note that all comments should be made to Greenwich Borough Council by Friday, 14th March 1997, at the address shown on the reverse of this leaflet.

The Thamesmead Context

The Gallions Reach Urban Village is the latest phase of a much wider land regeneration programme in the area, begun back in the 1960's by the former Greater London Council. The land was previously part of the massive Woolwich Arsenal complex, which was run down after the two World Wars.

By building a new community here, we can continue to bring this important site back into use

Providing for Local People

The scheme will include a proportion of housing for rent. The precise number of houses and flats will be agreed with Greenwich Borough Council before planning permission is granted.

Local people and local firms will be employed on building work as far as possible, and the developers are offering a formal procedure to ensure that training is available in appropriate cases.

The new housing will also lead to an improvement in the frequency of bus and other services for local residents as more of the site becomes occupied. All areas will be planned so that each house has a bus route within a short walk, cycle routes will be provided at the outset, and local roads will be designed so as to discourage non-essential car trips.
